
“AK 47 Chronicles”

Frank Vandall

Emory University School of Law, Atlanta, USA

Keywords

Guns, violence, children, constitutions, suicides, gun control, supreme court, D.C vs. Heller, Torts

Abstract

A key to improving, restructuring and advancing the global financial markets is personal safety. Violence, strife and war (at the extreme) are deterrents to economic expansion. All but one free country is aware that a critical foundation for expanded trade is local security. Countries, including Great Britain, Australia and Japan, therefore have extensive gun control. My play, “AK 47 Chronicles,” gives voice to this need for personal security by making manifest the day to day war in the United States that claims from 25,000 to 35,000 random victims of gun violence each year. “AK 47 Chronicles” embraces the policies of the free world economies and challenges the largest market, the United States to become much less violent. It is an indictment of U.S. gun policies, the National Rifle association and the Supreme Court’s decision in D.C. v. Heller. The theme is that in regard to globalization, the freeworld’s embrace of gun control laws needs to be exported to the U.S. and the wild-west gun slinging laws of the U.S. needs to be appropriately critiqued. Without legal restructuring there can be little global restructuring. “AK 47 Chronicles” is interactive.
